Things to Know About

FASHION concerns itself with lines. The corset, foundation of fashion, is like-wise a matter of lines.

In bygone days, corset lines related more to waist and bust than to waist and hip, but the modern corset, being the topless or practically so, controls the contour only from the waist down.

The lines from shoulder to waist must be fashioned by a brassiere or bandeau, but it is important that either be sufficiently long to come down over the top of the corset, not only to prevent an ugly line around the figure, but for comfort's sake as well.

If you will consider WARNER'S CORSETS AND WARNER'S BRASSIERES with this in mind, you will appreciate how subtly they blend together in fashion's most favored lines.

THE BUSY STORE

Things to Think About

UNDER a sheer blouse, a tight-fitting bandeau or confiner is bound to have an unattractive severity just above the waist-line. And yet, with a sheer blouse, a woman needs a garment which will keep the figure firm and insure trimness of contour.

That is why some of the most beautiful of the Redfern Bandeaux have an elastic waist-line with just enough fullness above it. Over the bust, however, they fit closely.

Here, then, is a real confiner which is designed for transparent blouses.

DO YOU realize how many women wear brassieres or bandeaux? That they are more necessary today than they have ever been.

WARNER'S BRASSIERES AND BANDEAU BRASSIERES are universally known for fine fit and lasting wear.

Things to Talk About

THE REDFERN CORSET has been called a Corset of individual types. Do you know why this is? Women's figures are not always perfectly proportioned. Sometimes, for instance, the figure is disproportionately heavy above the waist, sometimes below. The trunk may be unusually long and the limbs short, or vice versa. Corsets—to be satisfactory—should be designed with these irregularities in view.

It is a pliant, graceful, well-made corset—its material and boning of the finest—its designing superb for all types of figures.

It is made to follow all the movements of your body and adjust itself to them.

Its boning is guaranteed not to break, and its cloth not to tear.

That is what we mean by The Corset of Individual Types.

REDFERN CORSETS are so designed.
